from 01 / 10 / 2021 to Present	DIGIPOL (SNSF)	Role: Scientific coordinator Project name: “Digitalization and Political Conflict: Parties, Voters, and Electoral Alignment (DIGIPOL)” Location: University of Lucerne, Switzerland. Funding body: Swiss National Science Foundation

		As scientific coordinator of the DIGIPOL project, I supervise and coordinate all research activities and supervise the three other project team members (one post-doc and two research assistants) and am responsible for the overall management of the research project that studies the political conflict potential of the digital revolution. I also coordinate with external partners Demoscope and Mobilab regarding the data collection. The data collection, that I supervise, consists of a four-fold empirical strategy involving focus groups, a mass survey, a survey experiment with embedded self-developed voting advice application, manifesto coding, and a quantitative text analysis component of roll-call votes and parliamentary proceedings. The theoretical contribution of the project, that I am advancing with the development of a three-dimensional conceptualization, builds on the idea of “winners” and “losers” of digitalization from a political sociology perspective.
