ART. 6 - RESEARCH ACTIVITIES

The Fellowship implies carrying out the activities briefly mentioned below at Dipartimento di Medicina Veterinaria e Scienze Animali dell'Università degli Studi di Milano and under the supervision of Prof. MODINA SILVIA CLOTILDE BIANCA within the research programme "Myological properties of meat: morphology and molecular analyses to deepen knowledge in shelf-life technology", of the following research program and its specific aims:

Meat quality varies significantly among animal species and, within the same species, among different anatomical cuts, and is influenced by the metabolic properties of muscle fibers. In fact, the morphology and distribution of fibers can influence factors such as color stability and tenderness in beef and water-holding capacity and color in pork. Muscle characteristics can be modified by genetic selection and environmental conditions of breeding, as well as preservation methods. This study aims to quantify the impact of different storage times (shelf-life) on the quality of pork and beef, both fresh (stored in aerobiosis or vacuum-packed) and frozen. Preservation tests will be conducted on Longissimus Dorsi muscle, a target muscle for meat quality studies. At predetermined times, morphological analyses will be conducted to characterize oxidative, glycolytic, and intermediate fibers, and the expression of proteins that constitute the ion channels will be evaluated in order to study intracellular water fluxes. The data obtained will be correlated with meat quality and technological parameters (color, liquid-holding capacity, tenderness). The first year will be devoted to the characterization of Longissimus Dorsi muscle in two pig genotypes (commercial hybrid vs. autochthonous Caserta pig), while in the second year the characterization of the same muscle taken from Marchigiana cattle will be carried out considering two breeding systems (intensive vs. extensive).

The research activities are reported here:

1. Anatomical identification and sample collection;
2. Histological, histometric and immunohistochemical characterization (fibre typing) of porcine and bovine muscle tissue samples;
3. Molecular analyses for the study of muscle fibers and ion channels;
4. Statistical analysis
