Italian Peninsula. Participants will hone the skills needed for excavation, site documentation and materials study. They will also tackle the dissemination and enhancement of archaeological heritage through case studies, as well as educational insights and guided tours. The Summer School contributes to the training of students in archaeology by giving them an opportunity to follow all steps of the archaeological process, from excavation to evidence treatment, including documentation, survey, materials study as well as instructions for restoration, enhancement/planning, use, communication.

Academic organisation

The course will be held from 7 to 22 September 2022 in Tarquinia (VT), with 75 hours' teaching and exercises in English structured as follows:

- Archaeological excavation: the students, divided into small groups led by a supervisor, will take part in the excavations of the University of Milan at the monumental complex of the Civita di Tarquinia;
- Study of archaeological materials: the students, divided into small groups led by a supervisor, will be introduced to the study of archaeological materials and will have the opportunity to analyse and catalogue the finds from the digs of the University of Milan at the monumental complex of the Civita di Tarquinia;
- Insights and guided tours: the students will also learn through Etruscology insights and guided visits to the main sites and museums in Tarquinia and its surroundings.

A total of 3 academic credits (CFU) will be awarded for all training activities.

Attendance in the various course activities of the programme is mandatory.

Admission requirements

The programme is aimed at students of Bachelor's and Master's degree programmes in one of the following classes pursuant to Ministerial Decree 270/2004: L-1 Cultural heritage and LM-2 Archaeology. Bachelor's and Master's students in other subjects may also be admitted to the programme, subject to assessment by the competent boards.
